To Whom It May Concern:

There are those instances, though rare, when you know that you are standing at a "burning bush." These encounters with The King and His Kingdom are so powerful they are life changing! Seldom does an experience like this happen when reading a book, outside that book being the Bible. However, The Final Harbinger may lead to just such an experience for multitudes.

I have known Eric Broome for twenty-five years. Over these years he has remained a dedicated follower and humble servant of Christ. He is a layman in a local church, who submits to the authority of those over him. He is a mature believer, Spirit-filled, a student of God's Word, and not given to passing fads or popular facades. Having surrendered his own life to Christ, he knows what a "burning bush" experience is all about. He willingly shares his salvation experience, but has never felt compelled to write about it. Over the past three years, Eric has had another burning bush experience that has also changed his life - dramatically. Regarding this encounter (with the Word of God), he believes that he has a mandate to write about and proclaim it as broadly as possible. After all, this message is solely centered on Jesus.

God's Word is both historic and prophetic, each always relevant for today. As Eric studies the Word, he has been open to see and understand what he believes the Holy Spirit has illuminated to him, especially the prophetic events described in Revelation 12. It is here, that God has taken him on a remarkable journey, in which he concludes that the historic confirms the prophetic, effecting all of creation. What he has written is breath-taking and shocking. It will bring joy to some and cause concern for others. Some might say he is a prophet, while others will cry heretic. I have no doubt that Eric's writing will illicit varied responses, but I also have no doubt that it is God's plan to fully reveal Christ to all men.

Could God be using an obscure individual like Eric? Someone who is willing to risk ridicule and rejection for proclaiming what he believes the Holy Spirit has expressly shown him. Someone who provocatively addresses the future of the church and the need to have a personal relationship with Jesus – NOW! Read the book and decide for yourself.
